ENCOURAGING WORDS

Smart ?? Phones

Technology.... What did we ever do without it? I'm not about to throw my I Phone away, but in the interest of seeing the whole big picture, consider some of the DISADVANTAGES that I believe can be associated with our smart phones and handheld devices. And I'll freely admit that the following words are directed as much to me as to you. To put it another way, I'm writing not as an innocent bystander, but as a guilty party.

The art of conversation is dying. Thanks to texting, we're learning a whole new language, in abbreviations, word representations that fly off our fingertips with only a sub-conscious (at best) prompting from our brain. In the interest of speed and convenience, we no longer need thoughtful, carefully prepared sentences.

Good manners are dissolving. Thanks to texting, messaging and email, we can barge right into anybody's time without warning, and without fear of appearing rude or brash. We've even learned how to discreetly carry on "under the table" conversations with others in the same room, while something else has everyone's full attention (but ours)!

Self-restraint is shrinking. Thanks to the insulation provided by electronic communication, many are no longer hesitant to criticize, insult, condemn and otherwise offend others in a way that would never occur in a face-to-face encounter.

We're not as familiar with the Bible. I probably worry too much about the obsolescence of books. To a certain extent, I resent the intrusion of those electronic books that seem to be taking the place of those old volumes that used to fill our bookshelves. But, you are missing out on the value of making notations, underlining and just the pure familiarity of the terrain" of the scriptures.

You want to see just how technologically inclined humans are becoming these days? Just hand a two-year-old your smart phone and watch what all they can figure out how to do in mere seconds. In its proper place, technology is a great tool, but it will forever be a terrible master!
